

29.03.2013

- Do you think Berezovsky killed himself?
- Maybe - he's only human, after all. Depressed. Homesick. Bankrupt.
- No, that's not true, they say he'd just got another 300 million.
- He'd had his day. Couldn't fleece people in this country any longer the way he did back in the 90s.
- The government's doing it for him these days.
- But no more holidays in Cyprus. I don't have any sympathy with those bloodsuckers, I really don't.
- Abramovich has got a factory in our city. The production process is really toxic. But the company's registered somewhere else; he doesn't pay a penny in municipal taxes. Not a single penny, d'you understand? And what does he do for people there? Not one single thing. They're just useless rubbish as far as he's concerned, nothing but trash.
- And then Abramovich goes and builds a castle in New Zealand and spends a million protecting the ducks there. Words fail me, they really do.
- He's a "patron". Supports art and culture. An upstanding pillar of the community.
- Steal a bit here and there, and you're a criminal; steal on a grand scale, and you're a hero.
- I can't stand the sight of it one minute longer: all these people parking their Porsche in the yard. The workers have walk right past that every single day. What are they supposed to think? How do you get hold of a car like that? Not legally, you can be sure of that. Even if they work their fingers to the bone their whole life long, they'll never be able to afford a car like that.
- But all of THEM here in the West do exactly the same thing.
- Have you seen that photo of Merkel and Putin? He's even crying. He's holding her hand.
- Went a bit overboard with the Botox...
- I was wondering the other day: what if the crisis never ends? Damned bad luck to be stuck with living through all this.
- This crisis is never going to end.